1. The Ames Room Illusion

The Ames Room Illusion is an optical illusion that creates the perception of two people being vastly different in size, even though they are actually the same height. This illusion is achieved through the use of a distorted room, where the walls and floor are not parallel, creating a trapezoidal shape. When viewed from a specific point, the person standing in the corner of the room appears much larger than the person standing in the center.

2. The Ponzo Illusion

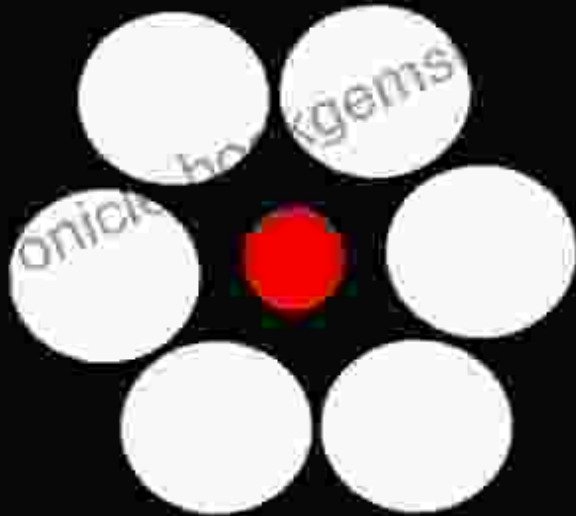

The Ponzo Illusion

The Ponzo Illusion is a visual illusion that tricks our brains into perceiving two lines of equal length as being different lengths. This illusion is created by placing the lines at an angle, with one line ending at a point and the other line extending beyond the point. The line that ends at the point appears shorter than the line that extends beyond the point, even though they are actually the same length.

3. The Ebbinghaus Illusion

Which Red
Circle is Smaller ?

The Ebbinghaus Illusion is a cognitive illusion that demonstrates how our perception of size can be distorted by the surrounding context. This illusion is created by placing two circles of the same size next to each other, with one circle surrounded by larger circles and the other circle surrounded by smaller circles. The circle surrounded by larger circles appears smaller than the circle surrounded by smaller circles, even though they are actually the same size.

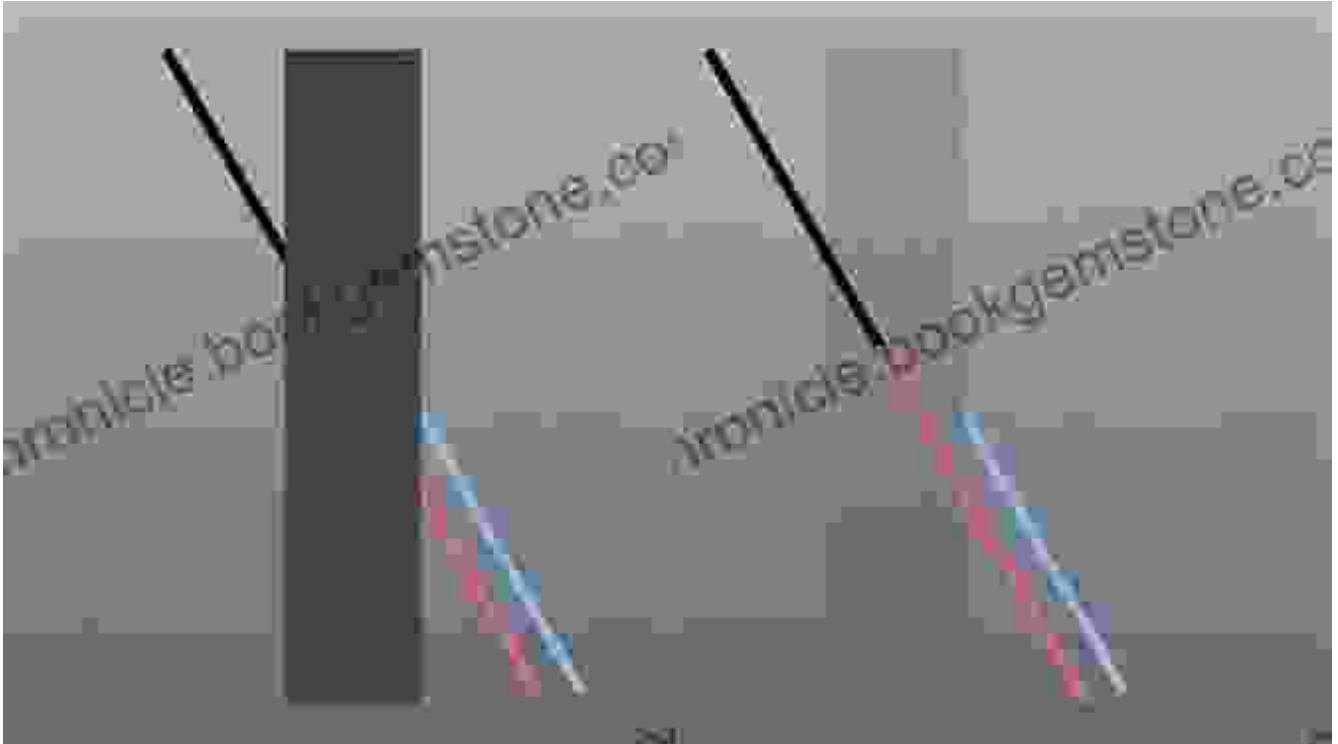

4. The Müller-Lyer Illusion

The Müller-Lyer Illusion

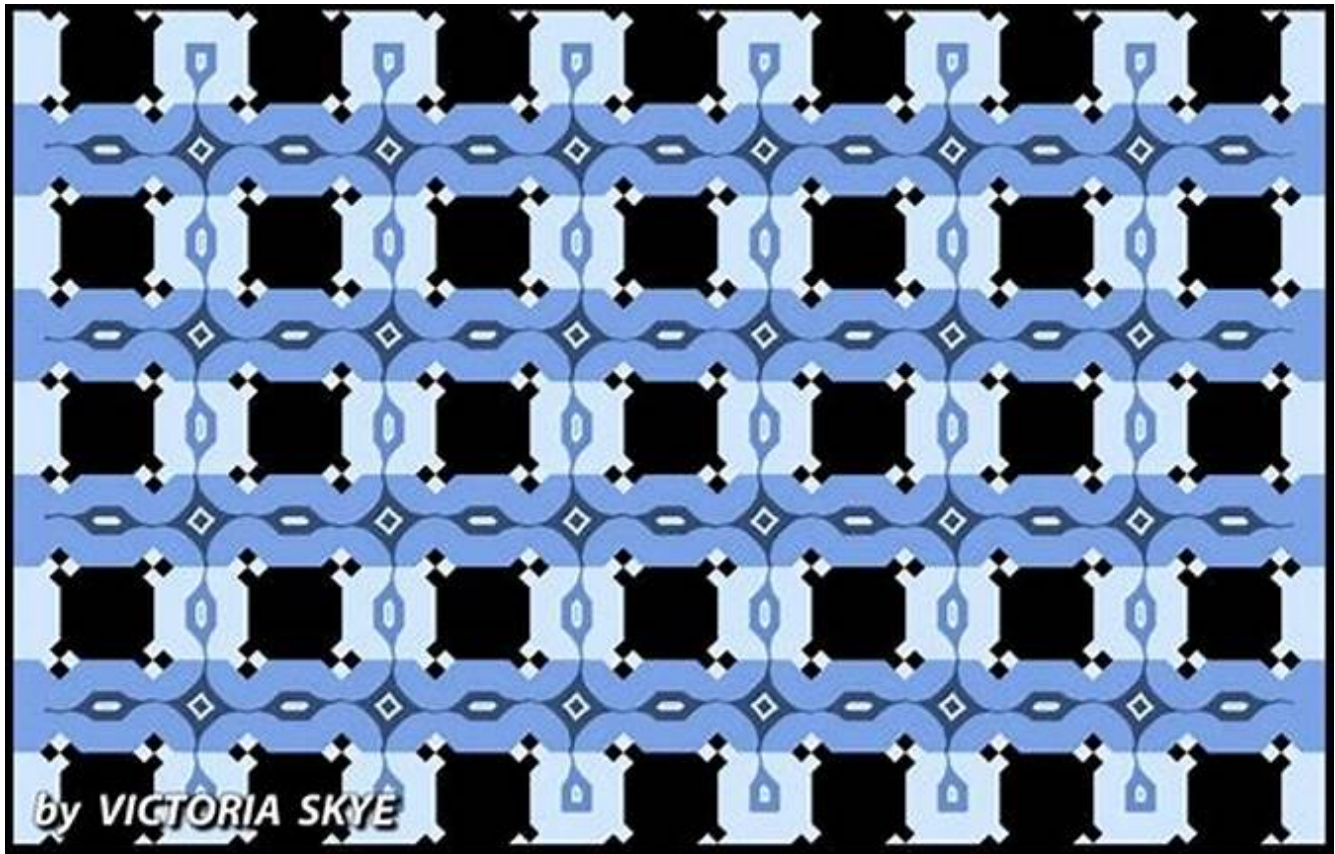

The Müller-Lyer Illusion is a visual illusion that demonstrates how our perception of length can be distorted by the direction of lines. This illusion is created by placing two lines of equal length next to each other, with one line having outward-pointing arrowheads at its ends and the other line having inward-pointing arrowheads at its ends. The line with outward-pointing arrowheads appears longer than the line with inward-pointing arrowheads, even though they are actually the same length.

5. The Poggendorff Illusion

The Poggendorff Illusion is a visual illusion that demonstrates how our perception of continuous lines can be disrupted by intersecting lines. This illusion is created by placing two diagonal lines that intersect each other, with a third line that is parallel to one of the diagonal lines and appears to intersect the other diagonal line. However, if the third line is actually extended, it does not intersect the other diagonal line.

6. The Café Wall Illusion

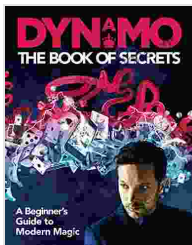

CAFE WALL OPTICAL ILLUSION

*Do the horizontal bars look like they bend and are at an angle?
Look again, because they dont bend. They are straight and in parallel rows.
The alternating target patterns, rows and colors all combine to trick your brain.*
