Background

New Zealand's healthcare system is based on the principles of universality, equity, and access. This means that all New Zealanders have access to basic healthcare services, regardless of their income or location. The system is funded through a combination of taxation and user charges.

The New Zealand healthcare system is administered by the Ministry of Health. The Ministry is responsible for setting health policy and funding healthcare services. District Health Boards (DHBs) are responsible for providing healthcare services to their local communities.

Challenges

The New Zealand healthcare system faces a number of challenges, including:

*

- An aging population

- Rising healthcare costs

- An increasing prevalence of chronic diseases
